Summary

May and June have never gone to school before, they've never been apart from each other either. Follow them as they get prepared and ready for school and navigate their first day school separately, follow them as their relationships change for better and worse. Meanwhile Scrooge is struggling to be the parent that webby May and June need as he juggles being a parent and the richest duck in the world.

Notes

Did I fuck up the Canon? Yes.

Do I care? Not really.

Is everyone going to hate me because I fucked up the canon? Yes.

And yes the title is a pun don't judge me

Separation

School was something neither May or June thought they would experience, going to actual school that is. Heron always taught them, Although her methods for teaching them weren't exactly school appropriate. So when Scrooge told them the news that they would be in school together their first thought was that they were going to be in the same class together. What Scrooge had yet to tell them however, was that they wouldn't be in the same class. Over the few weeks Scrooge had been their parent, scrooge had noticed differences in each of the clones.

May was a lot more levelheaded and resourceful than the younger of the two, where is June on the other hand, was a lot more like her older sister webby, hyper and always full of energy, which then asked the question did June inherit Webby's ADHD? Webby had been diagnosed for around eight years and she got the diagnosis when she was four years old, as like June she found it hard to concentrate and she found it hard to sit still for any amount of time unless she was adventuring. June was literally the same, she was not very easy to keep still, she found it hard to concentrate on one task after another and had frequent meltdowns and tantrums, but Webby was not like that minus a few similarities.

That was why Scrooge had the sad decision of separating the clones, May and June loved each other so much but when it came to their education Scrooge needed them to both do their best, and if separating them was the best way possible to accomplish that, then it would have to be like that.

Scrooge hadn't told the girls yet, Well, today was the day he had to tell them sooner or later. Scrooge gathered webby May and June in his office, the girls were confused but obliged. "What's going on dad?" Webby asked, feeling slightly more confident to call Scrooge her dad, but it still felt weird to say. Scrooge smiled at the nickname he was given and felt somewhat prideful as he heard his daughter say that. He swallowed down his pride and got back to the topic at hand. "As you three know, May and June will be starting school." He spoke, but just as he was about to continue all three girls got excited chanting that they were going to all be in the same class with each other. But Scrooges painful expression said otherwise, the girls silenced waiting for Scrooge to finish.

"But, I've been noticing some similarities between webby and June. The hyperactivity, losing concentration in certain tasks and so forth, which leads me to suspect that June may also have ADHD. But we don't know that yet, Bentina Will be booking June an appointment this following week, which leads me to some unfortunate news." He cleared his throat. The girls looking at him worried. He glances over at May and June, before taking a breath and probably regretting telling them this. "You three won't be in the same classroom together... Due to the fact that I previously mentioned about June may or may not having ADHD. So the school you girls will be attending are aware of my suspicions about June, so they suggested that June be in a more calming classroom environment." He spoke, instantly regretting everything he said

Webby was disappointed but okay with it, understanding why her dad made the decision as she too had noticed some similarities between her in June, although her younger sister had a lot more destructive tendencies even in normal playtime, Webby Will admit that she can be somewhat rough when it comes to playtime, like when she and the triplets were playing the deadly darts game. But June was a lot more destructive in her anger, whereas Webby learnt to control her anger by doing things to calm her down, June was raised in a place that didn't care if you had ADHD or not and didn't care whether you were destructive or not. So Webby understood why Scrooge made that decision, it was sad that June wouldn't be in the same classroom as them but she could always see her during lunch and break time so they weren't always going to be apart!

But May and June didn't look so impressed. The girls looked like they were bursting into tears, Scrooge looked like a horrible parent but he needed to learn to be that horrible parent even if it meant feeling Bad afterwards. Webby embraced both of her sisters telling them just through her hug that things would be okay. Scrooge looked guiltily at them, feeling bad that the plan didn't go so well. "May, June, Are you alright?" Scrooge asked hesitantly. June was the 1st to react, and it wasn't pleasant.

She lunged forward, heading straight for Scrooge as the older ducklings just stared in shock. She climbed up onto his desk and started shouting at him saying that her and May were always supposed to be together, saying that Scrooge was horrible for separating them. Scrooge felt a wave of guilt crush onto him, just as bad if not worse then the guilt he felt from telling his triplet nephews the truth about Della's disappearance. But this time he wasn't going to yell at them, he was going to try and comfort them in the best way possible by telling them things they could do at school, like make new friends, and sit at lunch together. He even promised to talk to the teachers of the school to let June sit with her sisters at lunch, but June wasn't having any of it. May also chipped in saying that she wouldn't be that far away, and if June missed her she could always give a group photo of her June and Webby together, so that when June did miss them she could look at the picture and remember it wouldn't be long until they were together again. But again, June wasn't having any of it.

Maybe telling all three of the girls together wasn't such a good idea... Scrooge would make a mental note of that.

"June dear, why don't you go somewhere to calm down, hmm? Then I can talk to you about it when you're nice and calm okay?" Scrooge tried to negotiate, June folded her arms climbing of the desk and stamping away.

May and Webby look at each other, then they look back at Scrooge who just felt plain awful.

"Don't worry, I'll go talk to her." Mae says, Scrooge nodded, allowing them to leave.

Seconds later, Bentina walked in his office with a sorrowful expression. "I take it it didn't go well?"

"No." Scrooge admitted fearfully. "I'm also concerned about... June. I think for safety reasons we need to book the appointment as soon as possible, June just almost physically injured me in her rage of anger. I'm really glad we convinced Donald and Daisy not to take them in, otherwise his poor houseboat would be ruined, and he saved up a lot to get that, especially what happened after the Atlantis trip." Scrooge said to his housekeeper, who nodded thoughtfully. "Don't worry Scrooge, I'll book the appointment as soon as I can. And yes, I also agree with you on the fact that we convinced Donald and Daisy not to take them in just yet, and now with June acting like this I really think it's a good idea we didn't convince them to take the girls in. I mean poor Donald for 10 years, he had no help raising either of the boys so I think he deserves a break, at least for a good 10 years." She says while laughing. Scrooge laughed with her too for a few solid minutes before the laughter died down and they got back to the conversation.

"Anyway, i'll get the appointment booked as soon as I can. In the meantime, I think you should talk to June and get her to express her feelings any way she can, through drawing, acting out or even ask her to find a song on how she's feeling. That's what I did with Webby, and it worked pretty well." Bentina advised, the Scotsman nodding affirmatively. Bentina bowed her head once then left, leaving the trillionaire father to think.

It has been three weeks since he adopted May and June, he would've allowed Donald and Daisy to take them in only a week after they arrived back and things were back to normal, but after June having all these outbursts and Scrooge suspecting what he was suspecting, Scrooge was honestly thankful he convinced Donald and Daisy not to take them. May would've probably been fine, but June not so much, Scrooge would've been fine with the girls living separately, one of them on the houseboat and together with him, but after June yelled at him for wanting to keep her and May apart, Scrooge then realised that it was probably best they weren't separate. Scrooge loved Donald to absolute bits but he did sympathise with the sailor when it came to him so desperately wanting a break, and having two more kids to take care of minus the nephews, would just be too much for one sailor and one fashion icon to handle. I mean, Scrooge knows how hard it was for Donald for the first 10 years raising the triplets by himself, but even if he had Daisy to help him with everything his houseboat wouldn't last 48 hours with June being so destructive. And for Donald's sake, it would be easier for the clones to stay with Scrooge, because May and June may accidentally break things that cost a lot, it was a childish excuse but Scrooge didn't want to have to worry Donald and his girlfriend.

Scrooge exhaled, forgetting that he held his breath for awhile. He got up and walked out of his office, walking up and down everyone's room to check to make sure that they're okay. Everyone was okay but then he came across May June and Webby having a conversation, or more like, May and webby were trying to calm June down.

"I don't want to be separated from you May! You're my sister! Thanks to scrooge we'll be separated! Thanks to him I won't be able to see you or webby!" She shouted, angry sobbing. Made wrapped alarm around her, pulling her close. " June, "she spoke softly. "Dad is just trying to help you... and we won't be separate all day, he said that he would talk to our teachers about us sitting together at lunch, and we can walk to school together, and maybe we can ask our teachers if we can see each other at recess, then we will only be a part for our lessons.." May spoke gently. "Can I tell you something? I don't want to be separate either, I want to be with you too, but we need to learn that we can't have everything we want anymore. Mommy Heron, told us to do bad things, like steel lie and hurt people. But we're not like that anymore, webby isn't like that, and we want to be like her, don't we? We wanna have friends and play with other kids don't we?"

June sniffled nodding. Webby and May pull her into a hug, as June sold on their shoulders.

"We've never been apart before... I'm scared..." May nodded sympathetically. "I'm scared too, but we won't stop being scared unless we try." May says, putting her hand out. "Together?" June and webby join her hand. "Together." May June and Webby say together, going in for another hug to signify that they would be together through this new period.

A few days later Bentina booked the appointment for June, in hopes that if what Scrooge was suspecting was right, they could soon have an answer to help her, and she hopefully wouldn't have meltdowns as frequently. Scrooge knew the girls weren't going to take it well, but he might as well tell them in advance because it would've been worse if he told them on their first day.

Now came the hard part.

Convincing June to talk to him. Even if May and webby had to physically be in the room for Scrooge to talk to June, he didn't care as long as they managed to talk calmly and talk about June's frustrations about being separated. With a deep breath, Scrooge knocked on the door with his cane, once he heard two of the three sisters allowing him and he slowly opened the door to be seen with June curled up in a ball crying, May and webby trying to comfort her, and June's favourite TV show playing on in the background. Scrooge didn't want to disturb this moment, June was somewhat calm and he didn't want to make her not calm again, but he needed to talk to her.

"June dear? Can we pause that a second? I just wanted to talk to you... Nothing bad, don't worry....." scrooge said quietly, as he attempted to put his hand on her back to comfort her just like her sister was doing. June looked up, nodding, Scrooge smiled at her, just waiting patiently when June was ready. After 10 minutes, June paused her show looking up at Scrooge. "I'm sorry for getting angry, sometimes, I don't know why it happens... I don't mean to be angry, I was frustrated and I didn't want to be separated from my sisters. But May told me that we're not going to be separate all day, we will still see each other, right May?"

May nodded. "Right. Remember what else we talked about? That Dad was just trying to help us, and that we can't have everything we want anymore, remember?" June nodded, getting up and going over to her bed, Scrooge following, he gestured to the bed asking June if he was allowed to sit on it, and she nodded.

Scrooge gestured Webby and May over to the bed as well, they nodded sitting either side of June, each wrapping their arms around her squeezing gently. "Do you know what an appointment is?" He asked June, she thought about it for a few minutes before giving a 50-50 kind of gesture. "Is it a doctor appointment? Where the doctor makes you better? Am I sick?!" She asked, beginning to ramble, Webby rubbing her back to try and calm her. Scrooge chuckled, taking June by the hand and rubbing it in circular calming motions.

"No honey, you're not sick. And you're close, it's a special kind of doctor. The type of doctor that you're going to see is going to do a few tests. You don't need to study for them," he chuckles getting the other girls to chuckle as well. "They'll be able to help you." Scrooge says, continuing to squeeze her hand. June smiled, squeezing his hand back. "It's okay to feel angry June... It's okay to feel frustrated, I understand that you're not used to this... And I want to help you." Scrooge says and June nodded. "Okay." She said quietly. Scrooge gestured to June's tablet, she picked it up and placed it on her lap. "I'm watching my favourite show! It's about a pelican and an island!" June says, jumping up and down a little as she pressed play and the episode continued.

After the episode, June paused it looking at Scrooge who had a bewildered smile on his face. If she liked it that was the main thing, he smiled again looking at all three of the girls. "Tomorrow, you girls are going to get supplies for school. Webby needs some new ones because her old set that I got her kept breaking."

I wonder why.

The girls nodded eagerly, excited to go school supply shopping. Scrooge laughed, paying them each $100 to spend on whatever they want. Although Scrooge was the richest duck in the world, he didn't want to spoil his girls. He most certainly didn't want his girls growing up spoiled and acting like they could have everything in the world, he wanted to show them the true definition of hard work. "If your girls do your chores today I will give you an extra $50 to spend on your school supplies, but that's it. I want to teach my girls the value of hard work."

"So why are you giving us $150 if you want us to learn the value of hard work?" The eldest of the sisters asked. Scrooge chuckled. "It's your first day at school, you deserve to have nice school supplies. This is a one-off occasion, your allowance is a lot lower than that usually, usually I'll only give you $20 a week, but today you girls are getting a little bit more to go and buy your school supplies. As I said, finish your chores, and you'll get the extra 50, okay?" The girls nodded.

Scrooge got up, turning to leave before June grabbed him by the hand, causing him to turn around and look at her quizzically. "Yes June?" He asked, waiting patiently for her to answer. "Thank you." She whispers, hugging Scrooge tightly. Scrooge returns the hug, pressing his beak into her head feathers comfortingly. "You're welcome." Scrooge whispered, as June loosened her grip, allowing him to leave. He tipped his hat, causing the girls to giggle and resume watching their episode. Scrooge giggled outside of the door as he heard his three girls giggle also going off to tell Bentina the good news.

In the kitchen, the housekeeper was busy organising things when Scrooge walked in.

Bentina turned around looking at Scrooge with a pleasant smile on her face. "Did you talk to them?" She asked. Scrooge nodded thoughtfully as he rested himself on his cane. "Aye, that I did Bentina. And I told them about June's appointment next week, which her siblings will help her prepare for. That reminds me, tomorrow you have to take them to get school supplies, bring the boys along as well, they can all get something." Bentina chuckled softly to herself. "I don't think Launchpad will be available to take us, he's in St. Canard, with Drake and Gosalyn." Scrooge smiled. "Well, we'll pick them up, it's been awhile since the boys have hung out with Gosalyn." Scrooge said. "Alright then, I'll go and tell them." She said quickly dashing away to go and talk to Drake and LP.

The next day, in the DuckBerg mall.

Huey, Dewey, Louie, Webby, May, June, Lena, Violet, Gosalyn, and B.O.Y.D were standing excitedly in the middle of the mall entrance, their respective guardians behind them. "Now kids," Scrooge said. "I want you to meet us here in approximately four hours, you have four hours to do whatever you like. But please, make sure you get the school supplies, alright?" The nine kids saluted. May and June linking hands with each other so they wouldn't get lost. Scrooge stepped back, nodding, allowing them to leave. He stepped back with the other adults, Drake and Launchpad smiled, their hands interlaced with each other.

Violet's parents interlaced their fingers with each other too, as Gyro instructed Little Bulb to stay with the kids, to make sure they weren't getting into any trouble. He saluted and quickly scampered off.

Huey was leading them, making sure everyone stayed on track. Their first stop, to get that out of the way, was the school supplies store. Huey handed May and June The money uncle Scrooge intrusted him with, explaining that they needed to buy everything on his list. The girls nodded and quickly went off to go and buy the things they needed.

May and June arrived in the store, still holding each other's hand so they wouldn't get lost. "Look at all these things May!" June exclaimed, pointing at everything and running around everything. May gripped her hand tightly, reminding her that they needed to get everything on the list before they could get anything extra. But June wanted to look around some more, so she let go of May, folding her arms and pouting. "June..." May warned. "Remember what Dad said? You need to learn to calm down, okay? Take a deep breath... Nice and calm, and then we'll talk about it yeah?" June nodded. "I know May... But everything looks so interesting! I want everything!!!" June pouted, as her yellow wearing sister hugged her. "I know, but we can't have everything, remember? We have to earn things if we want them..." She said, getting out the list. The first thing on their list was to get them each a school bag to put all their supplies inside. May took June's hand, guiding her to a wall of neatly placed schoolbags.

June's eyes lit up as she saw every single school bag, ranging from rainbows, to kitties, to hearts, inspirational messages and quotes, to cartoon characters on bags, like one of them had a picture of three main characters, one wearing brown slacks, the other wearing a blue oversized Hoody with a red cap on backwards, and the one in the middle next to the other characters, was wearing a pink dress with a flower, tying her oddly shaped ears together. Another bag displayed two mice placed on it, one of them looking exuberantly cheerful, and the other looking how some parents felt when they took their children in here. As the catchphrase on the bottom of the bag read underneath the mice. 'Gee, Brain what do you wanna do tonight?' and the other part of the catchphrase saying 'The same thing we do every night, quacky, try to take over the world!'

The girls giggled at all the bags, but finally decided on two bags that they really liked. May chose a yellow bag with a inspirational quote in white writing that said 'Follow Your Dreams' on it. And June chose a blue bag, with a pretty butterfly on the front of it. Once they showed each other their bags, they smiled and decided to choose that one. Next on the list was some school pencils. June took May by the hand as she guided them to the place where all the school pencils were kept. Again, like the bags, there was a huge amount to choose from. From the classic yellow pencils with the pink eraser on the end, to the same classic pencil only in multiple different colours but with different coloured erasers on the ends. There were sparkly pencils, which June liked the most. So she picked several sparkly blue pencils, meanwhile May was still searching.

She came across these pretty pencils that had feathers on the end, she liked them, and decided to get a few of them in her favourite colour yellow of course. Now that they gathered the pencils, they needed some notebooks.

May lead them over to where the notebooks were stacked, all of them in rainbow order. Sticking with their colour themes, June and May each got a yellow and blue notebook, May had a inspirational quote on the inside of hers where as June didn't. June got upset that she didn't have a inspirational quote on hers so, May went to go and see if there was another notebook in the same colour with an inspirational quote on, but unfortunately there was not. So May explained to her sister that not everything would be the same, she showed her pencils as an example. "See? They're all different, they don't have to be the same." May reassured her sister and she nodded. "School bags, check, pencils, check notebooks, check what's next. "May looked at the list. "now we need lunchboxes! "She guided her sister over to the lunchboxes, which were all hanging on one giant wall. Again, the girls saw three main characters that they saw the school bag, along with the two mice, this show must be popular.

Many lunchboxes, binders, pencil cases, pencils, and arguments later. May and June all came out with everything they needed for school. The kids laughing at how much they got, luckily most of the things were compromised on. With the girls playing a game of Rock Paper Scissors or deciding on another similar design that they both liked.

"I think that's everything on the list, now come on, we need to get some lunch." Huey said, clapping his hands together together the rest of the kids who were either looking at something else or were sitting on one of the many benches placed around the mall. Linking hands so they wouldn't get lost with each other. May and June standing next to their sister as Lena and violet held hands with each other as one of a Lena's hands gripped Gosalyn as she gripped B.O.Y.D's. As Huey Dewey and Louie also gripped hands with each other, as the eldest triplet lead them to the food court.

When they arrived at the food court, the eldest triplet told them to wait while he went to go and look at the cheapest food places so they weren't spending any more money than they already had to. Even though May and June did their chores, the eldest triplet advised them not to spend their money right away, as he explained that the youngest triplet did that within two hours, and wasn't given any more money until the next month because he spent it so quickly. Huey soon came back, explaining that they could all go to Hamburger Hippo, as it had just opened recently, making the first restaurant of the food chain to be in DuckBurg. All 10 kids, walked into the restaurant, Gosalyn feeling somewhat nostalgic as she remembered her nine-year-old self always coming here with her grandfather. The 10 kids all seated themselves at one giant table, feeling a little squished, but they still all managed to fit.

Thanks to Louie's 'smooth talking' The kids didn't need to pay as much money as they thought, but the eldest triplet facepalmed, he was too much sometimes. May and June happily bounced in their seats, Webby reminding them that this was a public place, and that they couldn't run around. Huey gave June one of his fidget toys, telling her that she can play with it if she needs something to do while she waits. She thanked her cousin and smiled, proceeding to play with the fidget toy that was shaped like a cube, pushing all the buttons on it making it make clicking sounds. When their food arrived, they all dug into their burgers shakes and fries, The youngest triplet smirking to himself knowing that his little sob story worked. "You amaze me sometimes, you know that? " Huey said, making the sarcasm evident. Louie not believing it was sarcasm, actually thanked him causing the eldest triplet to laugh and then cringe. "My sarcasm is lost on you, Louie." Huey said sarcastically making the youngest shrug. "Whatever."

After their lunch, Huey checked the time on his smart phone, remembering that they only had two hours left. "Alright. We have two hours left before uncle Scrooge is expecting us back. You may all split off now, May, June, Little Bulb needs to stay with you, as your sister is going with her friends to hang out with them okay? I don't want you wandering by yourself. "The girls nodded as they picked up the little lightbulb and placed him on Junes shoulder. "Okay. "They harmonise. "Meet back here in two hours, then we will go back to uncle Scrooge. "They all nodded, splitting off into their separate groups.

May and June scale held each other's hand, as they looked in all the stores surrounding them. They figured, just to stay safe that they would stay on this floor, besides, there were plenty of stores they hadn't explored yet. Like an arts and craft store, a movie store, and, probably the best thing of all, the Warner Brothers store. They first went into the craft store, bright colourful walls greeting them as they looked at all the colouring pages paint parts and easy to make felt things in the store, they still had the $50 they had earned from their chores, but didn't want to spend it right away. So they looked at things that they would get the most benefit out of, and decided to go with the colouring book, they could also use the colouring pencils that they got in their school supplies to colour it in, that way they weren't buying any more unnecessary pencils.

They went into the movie store, finding not so many interesting things. Although, they did find something with the three main characters they kept saying in the school supplies store, including the little mice friends. They decided to get the DVD so they could give the show a chance, it looked fun, so they bought that, making a mental note do not buy anymore. They remembered that they only had a little bit more time before it was time to meet the others to go back to their dad, so they decided to go back to the circle and sit on one of the many placed benches and wait for the others to return.

30 minutes of playing I Spy later. The rest of their friends soon arrived, Webby pulling her sisters into a big hug as Little Bob walked over to his robotic brother. "Come on, uncle Scrooge is expecting us back. " Huey says, is everyone quickly Lily tends as he led them back to Scrooge. Scrooge looked like he'd bought some things to, as evidenced by his housekeeper holding everything. May and June walked over to Scrooge, as he hugged them. "Hi Dad!" The three of his girls exclaimed, he chuckled nuzzling his beak against them all. "Did you have fun? " May and June nodded enthusiastically, showing off their new backpacks to their father who smiled proudly, as Webby also showed off her new things, making Scrooge giggle. They walked out of them all, all with their new things and a great adventure behind them.

Bentina looked at her granddaughter walking away with her siblings. It had been a week now and her thoughts still remains classified, hopefully soon she was willing to talk... Hopefully hopefully soon but for now, Bentina walked to the limo, opening the trunk and placing everything inside. As all 10 of the kids and the adults, all squeezed into the limousine, praying to absolute lord that LP didn't crush them.

But of course he did. Besides, no family adventure could end without one final crash.

Chapter End Notes

Hey everyone... I have a confession to make... My confession was that I was supposed to update their story months ago, but never got around to it because of some personal reasons that have been happening in my life... I'm really really sorry for not updating in two months, as I'm updating this it is May 16... Therefore showing I have an updated in a really really really long time... Which I'm really really sorry for... Please forgive me and please please please don't be upset or don't take to heart the fact that I have an updated. I am updating now and that's all that matters :-)) I am really sorry again guys, I hope this chapter is certainly made up for it... Love you
